

MEMBER OF
HARD WORKING MONEY

Membership can help your small business boost cash flow, so you can dream a little bigger.

See Membership Now

Click to watch

Supreme Court Invalidates Key Part of Voting Rights Act

Stephen Crowley/The New York Times

Wade Henderson, president and C.E.O. of the Leadership Conference on Civil and Human Rights, criticized the decision on Tuesday.

By ADAM LIPTAK
Published: June 25, 2013 | 1263 Comments

WASHINGTON — The Supreme Court on Tuesday effectively struck down the heart of the Voting Rights Act of 1965 by a 5-to-4 vote, freeing nine states, mostly in the South, to change their election laws without advance federal approval.

Multimedia

The court divided along ideological lines, and the two sides drew sharply different lessons from the history of the civil rights movement and the nation's progress in rooting out racial discrimination in voting. At the core of the disagreement was whether racial minorities continued to face barriers to voting in states with a history of discrimination.

- FACEBOOK
- TWITTER
- GOOGLE+
- SAVE
- E-MAIL
- SHARE
- PRINT
- REPRINTS

Log in to see what your friends are sharing Log In With Facebook on nytimes.com. Privacy Policy | What's This?

What's Popular Now

Supreme Court Bolsters Gay Marriage With Two Major Rulings

Two Major Rulings Back Gay Marriage

MOST E-MAILED

RECOMMENDED FOR YOU

1. Rare Visit Underscores Tangles in Obama's Ties to Africa

2. Rights Unit Finds Bias Against Transgender Student

3. Lacking Definitive Ruling on Affirmative Action, Both Sides Claim Victory

4. LATITUDE The Test You Want To Fail

5. ADVERTISING Commercials With a Gay Emphasis Are Moving to Mainstream Media

6. ECONOMIX The Case for Women

7. In U.S., a Rekindled War Over Abortion

8. IHT RENDEZVOUS Losing the Global Fight for Women's Health

9. BITS Instagram Video and the Death of Fantasy

10. BITS Betaworks Unveils Its Highly Anticipated

Opinion of the Court

Chief Justice Roberts opens his opinion by stating that "the Vo 1965 employed extraordinary measures to address an extraord using the "strong medicine" of applying heavy requirements on others to fight suppression of voting rights. He then suggests of

Interactive Feature
A Guide to the Supreme Court Decision on the Voting Rights Act

A History of Voting Rights

Court Rules on Voting Rights Act

The Formula Behind the Voting Rights Act

Related

On Voting Case, Reaction From 'Deeply Disappointed' to 'It's About Time' \(June 26, 2013\)

The Caucus: Reaction and Analysis of the Voting Rights Decision \(June 25, 2013\)

Justices Say Law Doesn't Require Child to Be Returned to Her Indian Father \(June 26, 2013\)

Related in Opinion

Editorial: An Assault on the Voting Rights Act \(June 26, 2013\)

Connect With Us on Twitter

Follow @NYTNational for breaking news and headlines.

Twitter List: Reporters and Editors

Enlarge This Image

"Our country has changed," Chief Justice John G. Roberts Jr. wrote for the majority. "While any racial discrimination in voting is too much, Congress must ensure that the legislation it passes to remedy that problem speaks to current conditions."

The decision will have immediate practical consequences. Texas announced shortly after the decision that a voter identification law that had been blocked would go into effect immediately, and that redistricting maps there would no longer need federal approval. Changes in voting procedures in the places that had been covered by the law, including ones concerning restrictions on early voting, will now be subject only to after-the-fact litigation.

President Obama, whose election as the nation's first black president was cited by critics of the law as evidence that it was no longer needed, said he was "deeply disappointed" by the ruling.

Justice Ruth Bader Ginsburg summarized her dissent from the bench, an unusual move and a sign of deep disagreement. She cited the words of the Rev. Dr. Martin Luther King Jr. and said his legacy and the nation's commitment to justice had been "disserved by today's decision."

She said the focus of the Voting Rights Act had properly changed from "first-generation barriers to ballot access" to "second-generation barriers" like racial gerrymandering and laws requiring at-large voting in places with a sizable black minority. She said the law had been effective in thwarting such efforts.

The law had applied to nine states — Alabama, Alaska, Arizona, Georgia, Louisiana, Mississippi, South Carolina, Texas and Virginia — and to scores of counties and municipalities in other states, including Brooklyn, Manhattan and the Bronx.

Chief Justice Roberts wrote that Congress remained free to try to impose federal oversight on states where voting rights were at risk, but must do so based on contemporary data. But the chances that the current Congress could reach agreement on where federal oversight is required are small, most analysts say.

Justices Antonin Scalia, Anthony M. Kennedy, Clarence Thomas and Samuel A. Alito Jr. joined the majority opinion. Justice Ginsburg was joined in dissent by Justices Stephen G. Breyer, Sonia Sotomayor and Elena Kagan.

The majority held that the coverage formula in Section 4 of the Voting Rights Act, originally passed in 1965 and most recently updated by Congress in 1975, was unconstitutional. The section determined which states must receive clearance from the Justice Department or a

Digg RSS Reader

Log in to discover more articles based on what you've read.

Log In

Register Now

f Log In

What's This? | Don't Show

Milan Men's Fashion Week: Giorgio Armani

ALSO IN T MAGAZINE »

Men's wear gets a dose of flower power
A Victorian house in London, built with mirrors

nytimes.com

T MAGAZINE

JUST 99¢ for 4 WEEKS OF A DIGITAL SUBSCRIPTION TRY IT NOW > The New York Times nytimes.com

Ads by Google

what's this?

NET10® Unlimited

Family Phone Plan, No Contract
Up To 4 Phones, Starting at $50/mo.
www.Net10Wireless.com

Drew Angerer for The New York Times
Representative John Lewis of Georgia, center left, and Representative John Conyers Jr. of Michigan, right, at a news conference. The Voting Rights Act covered nine states, mostly in the South.

federal court in Washington before they made minor changes to voting procedures, like moving a polling place, or major ones, like redrawing electoral districts.

Section 5, which sets out the preclearance requirement, was originally scheduled to expire in five years. Congress repeatedly extended it: for five years in 1970, seven years in 1975, and 25 years in 1982. Congress renewed the act in 2006 after holding extensive hearings on the persistence of racial discrimination at the polls, again extending the preclearance requirement for 25 years. But it relied on data from the 1975 reauthorization to decide which states and localities were covered.

Readers' Comments

Readers shared their thoughts on this article.

Read All Comments \(1263\) »

The current coverage system, Chief Justice Roberts wrote, is “based on 40-year-old facts having no logical relationship to the present day.”

“Congress — if it is to divide the states — must identify those jurisdictions to be singled out on a basis that makes sense in light of current conditions,” he wrote. “It cannot simply rely on the past.”

The decision did not strike down Section 5, but without Section 4, the later section is without significance — unless Congress passes a new bill for determining which states would be covered.

It was hardly clear, at any rate, that the court’s conservative majority would uphold Section 5 if the question returned to the court in the unlikely event that Congress enacted a new coverage formula. In a concurrence, Justice Thomas called for striking down Section 5 immediately, saying that the majority opinion had provided the reasons and had merely left “the inevitable conclusion unstated.”

The Supreme Court had repeatedly upheld the law in earlier decisions, saying that the preclearance requirement was an effective tool to combat the legacy of lawless conduct by Southern officials bent on denying voting rights to blacks.

Critics of Section 5 say it is a unique federal intrusion on state sovereignty and a badge of shame for the affected jurisdictions that is no longer justified.

The Voting Rights Act of 1965 was one of the towering legislative achievements of the civil rights movement, and Chief Justice Roberts said its “strong medicine” was the right response to “entrenched racial discrimination.” When it was first enacted, he said, black voter registration stood at 6.4 percent in Mississippi, and the gap between black and white registration rates was more than 60 percentage points.

In the 2004 election, the last before the law was reauthorized, the black registration rate in Mississippi was 76 percent, almost four percentage points higher than the white rate. In the 2012 election, Chief Justice Roberts wrote, “African-American voter turnout exceeded white voter turnout in five of the six states originally covered by Section 5.”

The chief justice recalled the Freedom Summer of 1964, when the civil rights workers James Chaney, Andrew Goodman and Michael Schwerner were murdered near Philadelphia, Miss., while seeking to register black voters. He mentioned Bloody Sunday in 1965, when police officers beat marchers in Selma, Ala.

“Today,” Chief Justice Roberts wrote, “both of those towns are governed by African-American mayors. Problems remain in these states and others, but there is no denying that, due to the Voting Rights Act, our nation has made great strides.”

Justice Ginsburg, in her dissent from the bench, drew a different lesson from those events, drawing on the words of Dr. King.

“The great man who led the march from Selma to Montgomery and there called for the passage of the Voting Rights Act foresaw progress, even in Alabama,” she said. “The arc of the moral universe is long,’ he said, but ‘it bends toward justice,’ if there is a steadfast commitment to see the task through to completion.”

In her written dissent, Justice Ginsburg said that Congress was the right body to decide whether the law was still needed and where. Congress reauthorized the law in 2006 by large majorities; the vote was 390 to 33 in the House and unanimous in the Senate. President George W. Bush, a Republican, signed the bill into law, saying it was “an example of our continued commitment to a united America where every person is valued and treated with dignity and respect.”

The Supreme Court considered the constitutionality of the 2006 extension of the law in a 2009 decision, Northwest Austin Municipal Utility District Number One v. Holder. But it avoided answering the central question, and it seemed to give Congress an opportunity to make adjustments. Congress, Chief Justice Roberts noted on Tuesday, did not respond.

Justice Ginsburg suggested in her dissent that an era had drawn to a close with the court’s decision on the Voting Rights Act, in Shelby County v. Holder, No. 12-96.

“Beyond question, the V.R.A. is no ordinary legislation,” she wrote. “It is extraordinary because Congress embarked on a mission long delayed and of extraordinary importance: to realize the purpose and promise of the Fifteenth Amendment,” the Reconstruction-era amendment that barred racial discrimination in voting and authorized Congress to enforce it.

“For a half century,” she wrote, “a concerted effort has been made to end racial discrimination in voting. Thanks to the Voting Rights Act, progress once the subject of a dream has been achieved and continues to be made.”

“The court errs egregiously,” she concluded, “by overriding Congress’s decision.”

This article has been revised to reflect the following correction:

Correction: June 25, 2013

An earlier version of this article misstated the name of a civil rights worker murdered in 1964. He was Michael Schwerner, not Schwermer.

A version of this article appeared in print on June 26, 2013, on page A1 of the New York edition with the headline: Justices Void Oversight Of States, Issue At Heart Of Voting Rights Act.

SAVE E-MAIL SHARE

Try unlimited access to NYTimes.com for just 99¢. SEE OPTIONS »

1263 Comments

Readers shared their thoughts on this article.

ALL | READER PICKS | NYT PICKS

Newest | Comments Closed

Get Free E-mail Alerts on These Topics

Ads by Google

what's this?

B.Y.O.D. VoIP $5.99/month

Unlimited Calling, Voice Mail,
Free Setup & 2nd Line. No Contract
www.PhonePower.com

INSIDE NYTIMES.COM

EUROPE »

Court Hears Arguments on Whaling by Japan

OPINION »

Is the Civil Rights Era Over?

After a confusing week of rulings on race and marriage, Room for Debate asks whether the civil rights movement is growing, dying or dead.

GREAT HOMES »

Downsizing, Gone Big

THEATER »

Bratty Children, Beware

OPINION »

Latitude: Crime and Banishment

A U.S. policy to deport illegal aliens convicted of crimes may reassure Republicans in Washington, but it worries local authorities in Mexico.

FASHION & STYLE »

Laughing All the Way To the Bank

OPEN

MORE IN U.S. (1 OF 31 ARTICLES)

Bill to Expand U.S. Database to Verify Hires

Read More »