

Engaging Places

Strategies and ideas to connect people with historic places

Video: Interpreting a woman suffrage photo

Posted on March 8, 2013 VIDEO

The Local History Specialist of the Pikes Peak Library District in Colorado interprets a 1915 photo of women seated in an open car advocating for the woman's right to vote. The content is a bit overwhelming for me (its needs some themes and fewer discrete facts) but it provides an example of interpreting collections through video. It's part of the "Framing Community, Exposing Identity" series to interpret "iconic images capturing life at the foot of Pikes Peak."

Share this:

EmailPrintLinkedIn 3Twitter 1FacebookGoogle +1More

Like this:

★ Like

Be the first to like this.

This entry was posted in Collections, Historical interpretation and tagged Colorado, Video, Women's history by Max van Balgooy. Bookmark the permalink [<http://engagingplaces.net/2013/03/08/video-woman-suffrage/>].